COLUMBUS – Twenty-two businesses will receive Healthy Ohio awards during the annual Worksite Health Promotion Conference Nov. 15 at the Greater Columbus Convention Center. The awards will be presented by Alvin D. Jackson, M.D., director of the Ohio Department of Health and MaryBeth Arensberg, chair of the Healthy Ohio Business Council. The conference features national experts on worksite health promotion and business benefits including David Chenoweth, Ph.D., East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C. and Thomas Parry, Ph.D., The Integrated Benefits Institute, San Francisco.

Healthy Ohio is part of Governor Ted Strickland’s comprehensive health care reform initiative and consists of three core areas: health promotion, disease prevention and health equity. The Healthy Ohio - Healthy Worksite awards recognize Ohio employers that demonstrate a commitment to employee health through comprehensive worksite health promotion and wellness programs.
